

Summary of our European Trip in Denmark and Italy

- ✂ 15 meetings
- ✂ 1 seminar
- ✂ 8,770 miles flown
- ✂ 874 km driven in Italy
- ✂ Cities visited: Copenhagen, Milano, Vicenza, Padova, Mestre and... Venezia
- ✂ Transportation means used: plane, train, metro, car and... vaporetto in Venezia

Our European tour was a great success and exceeded expectations! We were able to meet with 12 local Danish and Italian companies, a number of partners and existing clients and also offer one seminar in Copenhagen. Meetings were very much centered around specific questions and cases that companies will be facing when thinking about accessing the U.S. market.

The Copenhagen seminar also dealt with specific questions and operational concerns dealing with logistics, market and of course costs. Based on our years of experience in this field, and after having worked with many clients, we can today give a very good outlook for a company regarding what it will be facing when thinking about the U.S. as their next market to expand to. We even have a document that we share with companies that are seriously interested in contemplating a U.S. operation, which highlights the process, timeline and costs involved in such a project.

We are now moving forward with a few of the companies we met during this trip to define their U.S. needs and ultimately give them a proposal on how we can support their expansion plans through our U.S. Access program.

Due to this success, we will be holding such trips on a regular basis moving forward. Our services are highly personalized and require an important degree of trust between us and our clients, and vice-versa, which can only be established in a face-to-face meeting, therefore, driving our commitment to continue with such trips in the future.

If you are a smaller company seriously thinking about the U.S. market, contact us today so that we can start discussing your needs and hopefully meet you in person on one of our upcoming international trips.

Our next planned international trip will take us to Israel and Spain (Barcelona) in August 2009. Interested in meeting with us? Send us and email to info@remingtonbusinessgroup.com

Remington to conduct seminar in New Jersey

Remington will be holding a seminar focused on how small U.S. companies can do business abroad easily.

The 1.5 hour long seminar will take place at the Business Development Incubator (visit <http://www.njcu.edu/bdi> for information about the center) located in Jersey City, NJ on June 4th at 11:00am.

The agenda will include:

- An overview of the Remington Business Group
- An overview of our partners and a presentation by Oren Adler of Gideon Adler CPA & Co.
- A presentation of the process and challenges small companies face when thinking about foreign expansion
- A presentation by 'Local Knowledge' – our Belgian partner
- Free consultation for interested companies after the seminar

This seminar will highlight some of the challenges that companies face when seeking to expand their operations abroad and the answers that Remington's partners offer to resolve such challenges. By working with Remington on your foreign expansion plans, you will not only benefit from a local presence in the target country but also from local support given to you here in the U.S., starting with the planning stage and throughout the life of the project.

What has always been the realm of large companies, due to high costs and complex logistics, has now been greatly simplified and adapted to small companies' budgets and operations.
